Railroad's Contest With Westery Man

New Haven Road Makes Issue with Louis Cella Over Property Title—A. B. Crafts Wants $50,000 from Mechanics Savings Bank—Dividend Paid Depositors—Liquor Raid in Hopkinton.

Albert B. Crafts, formerly of Westery, now of Cranston, and a former attorney for the Mechanics Savings bank, has brought suit against the directors of the bank, which has been in liquidation for nearly ten years, for the sum of $50,000 for services alleged to have been rendered. Crafts had already received $15,000 and it is understood that he has given receipt in full for services rendered some time ago. The writ is returnable to the supreme court in Providence Feb. 11. The suit will be contested.

There was a case of forcible ejection at the corner of West Broad and Mechanic street Wednesday morning from the building recently erected by Louis Cella on the site of the old town hall and which, as it is said by an aged resident of Pawcatuck, contained a building ever since the induction of the railroad, and before. The Cella building stands in a semi-circle which in part forms an abutment for the railroad bridge across West Broad street; the roof is just below the level of the tracks. There was no cellar to the old town hall and when Mr. Cella decided upon a new structure he had the foundation of the new building in place before the old one was taken down. While this was going on there was talk to the effect that Mr. Cella would be enjoined by the railroad company from placing a building on the premises, but the building was carried on to completion and occupancy. There was no interference during the progress of the work, although railroad men visited the premises for purposes of observation.

Nearly a year ago C. Hadial Hull, representing the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad company, came to Pawcatuck and told Mr. Cella that the building was on railroad property and ordered that no more improvements be made to the property. Mr. Cella, believing himself to be the owner of the property, took no heed of the attorney's warning and continued in occupancy of the premises.

Wednesday morning Assistant Engineer Chevalier of the railroad company, accompanied by three stone masons, arrived from Providence and went to the Cella building, which is a small two-story frame structure, with the stone masons carried their implements of trade and asked the proprietor of the store, Harry Stralson, for permission to go into the cellar. Stralson supposed they were workmen for the gas or water department, as he was a new tenant, and had no knowledge of any claim made by the railroad company to the property.

Soon the men commenced drilling holes in the cellar walls. Mr. Stralson made investigation and inquiry, but received no satisfactory response from the workmen. He hurriedly summoned Mr. Cella, the landlord, and the workmen informed him that they were on railroad property and doing work for the railroad company and they positively refused to leave or stop work on orders from Mr. Cella.

Mr. Cella held hurried consultation with his lawyer, Herbert W. Rathbun, and he ordered the railroad employees from the premises, but without effect. Deputy Sheriff William H. Casey was called and the workmen were ejected from the premises.

Wednesday afternoon Hadial A. Hull, Frank L. McGuire and C. Hadial Hull, representing the railroad company, came to Westery and went into consultation with Judge Rathbun, attorney for Louis Cella. The New London lawyers stated that the railroad company owned the property in dispute and proposed to take legal possession. The affair of the morning was gone into in detail, and the attorneys in the case visited the property. Mr. Hull formally made demand upon Mr. Cella that the railroad employees be permitted to go back to work on the premises. This was refused by Mr. Cella, by advice of his attorney. Mr. Hull then announced that suit would be brought immediately to secure possession of the property.

The physical position of the property was pointed out and it was shown that the alleged Cella property was claimed to be within the railroad property lines. If the line as pointed out is adhered to it means the taking of more land in that vicinity upon which houses are now constructed.

Deputy Sheriff William H. Casey was called and the workmen were ejected from the premises by force and the entrance to the cellar locked and barred. This is considered as a shamish to the battle to decide whether the property is owned by Louis Cella or the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad company.

The room occupied by the Mechanics Savings bank in the Barber Memorial building was besieged by depositors Wednesday eager to secure the 10 per cent dividend made possible by the good management of Alexander C. Thompson as treasurer and trustee, aided by a conscientious board of directors. The bank went into liquidation in 1909 and soon thereafter from the sale of the cream of the investments a dividend of 25 per cent was promptly paid. In 1921 Mr. Thompson took entire charge of the affairs of the bank and since then there has been payment of three other dividends of 25, 10 and 10 per cent, making a total of 70 per cent. It is the opinion of the officers of the bank to pay all the depositors in full, and with interest, and it is believed that this end can finally be achieved.

Illustration of the work being done can perhaps be best shown by what is being accomplished by one of the directors, Charles W. Willard, who has direct charge of the affairs of the property in the south. Mr. Willard has greatly improved the orange groves that were not worth a dollar an acre when the bank went into liquidation. The first year the crop did not yield a profit of $100, but by improvements made by Mr. Willard the groves have been richly productive and a considerable amount of money is earned by the depositors of the bank. When Mr. Willard took charge of the hotel property the buildings were dilapidated and the grounds neglected. He made gradual improvements and made the non-productive property productive. Now in the near vicinity of this hotel property wealthy people from the north and west are building handsome summer homes, and there is bright prospect of increased value in the hotel property when the time is ripe to sell.

The bank has 1,329 depositors; of this number 128 have deposits of $500 and $1,000, 47 have deposits of $1,000 and upwards and the largest individual amount of deposit is $5,613.55.

The bank building of the Washington Trust company, one of the oldest and most substantial if not the largest and most imposing, is to be enlarged and improved. The general exterior architectural appearance of the building will not be changed. The trust company has acquired from William Segar land in the rear of the bank building and a proportionately large extension will be added to the structure as soon as there is actual transfer of the additional property. The growth of business of the trust company and the attending increase in working force has made this proposed enlargement necessary.
